- E. SCULPTURES SHOWING DIFFERENT PEOPLE
- F. VARIOUS WAYS TO VIEW THE SCULPTURES

UNDERWATER MUSEUM

4.1.

The National Marine Park in Cancun, Mexico, is visited each year by over 750,000 divers. They come to see the world's most amazing coral reef. Unfortunately, they also cause a lot of damage. In 2009, the park's authorities decided to create an underwater sculpture museum as an alternative destination for divers, and in this way, protect the endangered coral reef and the sea creatures which depend on it.

4.2.

The nearly 500 life-size human figures displayed in the Cancun Underwater Museum were modelled on members of the local community and presented in various poses. There is, for example, a little girl with a smile on her face looking up to the surface, six business people with their heads buried in the sand, paying no attention to their surroundings, and a tired-looking man behind a desk with a dog sitting next to him.

4.3.

The crystal-clear waters of the Caribbean Sea make it easy to admire the sculptures. Visitors who are water sports enthusiasts usually choose snorkelling or scuba diving to explore this museum wonderland. For tourists who want to avoid getting wet on their trip to the museum, there are guided tours in a boat with a bottom made of glass. You can also book a day trip that combines the glass-bottom boat tour with a guided snorkelling tour with all necessary equipment included.

4.4.

Most boats offering scuba diving tours of the museum leave in the early morning so you need to plan your transport to the port carefully. Any resort hotel should be able to arrange this for you. A diving licence is not necessary; however, having one is certainly a plus. Visitors without a diving licence have to take a short training course on the proper use of diving equipment and can only dive if accompanied by an instructor. While diving, you should avoid touching the sculptures or disturbing the marine life in any way. Also, wearing eco-friendly sunscreen is a must.

To: Jerry White Cc Bcc

Subject: A visit 😊

Hi Jerry,
Recently, I visited some friends in London who used to live near me in a country area in Devon. I was amazed by the balcony of their flat. We spent a long time sitting there and it was so peaceful and quiet. Although the flat is located in the heart of a very lively and noisy neighbourhood, I felt like we were in paradise because the balcony was full of exotic bushes and fabulous flowers. Now I understand why my friends don't miss living in the countryside too much.
All the best,
Ann

When you are in Cornwall, you must visit the Lost Gardens of Heligan. In the late 1600s, the Heligan estate was bought by a rich family who then created the gardens surrounding the house. For centuries, the gardens' extraordinary collection of plants from all over the world attracted plant lovers including members of the Royal Family. However, at the beginning of the 20th century, the gardens fell into ruin because there was nobody to take care of them. Luckily, in the 1990s the gardens were rediscovered and brought back to life in a project shown on TV, and they have become one of England's most popular botanical attractions for tourists and local people.

ALICE AND THE MAGIC GARDEN

Alice knew that she was now only ten inches high, and her face brightened up at the thought that she was the right size for going through the little door into that lovely garden.

Unfortunately for poor Alice, when she got to the garden door, she realized she had forgotten the little golden key. When she went back to the three-legged table all made of solid glass to get the key, she found she could not possibly reach it: she could see the key through the glass, and she tried her best to climb up one of the legs of the table, but it was too slippery; and when she had tired herself out with trying, she sat down and cried.

Na podstawie: Lewis Carroll, Alice in Wonderland

5.3. We learn from the text that Alice

- A. wasn't able to get the key for the garden door.
- B. didn't remember how to get to the garden door.
- C. was now too tall to get through the garden door.

I went into one of my favourite local restaurants recently and sat down at a table near the door. The place was practically empty, so most of the tables were free. After a couple of minutes, a member of the staff came up to me and said, "I see you've seated yourself." "Yes," I replied.

"Didn't you see the 'Please Wait to Be Seated' sign?" she asked angrily. I'd been to that restaurant many times and, of course, I'd seen the sign before.

"Gosh, I didn't notice it," I said.

"Well, you may have to wait some time for the waiter to come to you," she said.

There was no other customer within 50 feet, but that wasn't the point. The point was that I had ignored the notice. Sometimes the American love of order goes too far.

To take another example, some years ago, America's airlines began requiring passengers to present photographic identification when checking in for a domestic flight. The first time I heard of this was when I showed up to catch a plane at an airport 120 miles from my home.

"I need to see your picture ID*," said the check-in agent.

"Really? I don't think I have any," I said and began emptying my pockets, and then pulling my cards from my wallet. In the end, I found an ID with my picture. It was an old driving licence.

"I can't accept it; it's fifteen years old," he said. "I need something with a recent picture of you."

I took a deep breath and searched my luggage. Finally, I remembered I had a copy of one of my books with a recent photo of me on the cover. I handed it to him proudly.

He looked at the book and then at the printed list of acceptable IDs. "Books are not on our list," he said.

"I'm sure it isn't, but it's still me. It couldn't be more me." I lowered my voice and looked closer at him. "Are you seriously suggesting that I ordered this book to be printed so I could get on a plane to Buffalo?"

He looked hard at me for another minute, then called a colleague. They exchanged opinions and called more people to discuss it. We ended up with a crowd of three check-in agents, their manager, the manager's boss and two baggage handlers.

"What is the point of all this anyway?" I said to the manager. "Why do you need a picture ID?"

"It's a Federal Aviation Administration rule," he said.

"But why is it a rule?"

"You see the requirement is not simply to identify yourself, but to identify yourself in a way that precisely matches a written instruction," he answered.

In the end, the manager told the agent to check me in, but warned me not to try anything like that again.

A BRILLIANT REPLY

Did you know about the friendship between the two famous geniuses, the physicist Albert Einstein, and the silent movie star, Charlie Chaplin? It started during Einstein's US tour in the early 1930s. 7.1. _____ His work as a scientist was so admired that he was even given the keys to the city! Later, he went to California in order to give a lecture at the California Institute of Technology. Because he was known as a huge film lover, he was invited to watch a film at Universal Studios. 7.2. _____ The man agreed to do so. Even though Einstein and Chaplin had exchanged letters, this was the first time the two geniuses met in person. Shortly after, they took a tour of Universal Studios. They clearly enjoyed the time they spent together. Those two extraordinary people shared some amusing moments, too. For example, Einstein said to Chaplin, "What I most admire about your art is its universality. You don't say a word, yet the world understands you!" 7.3. _____ He said, "True. But your glory is even greater! The whole world admires you, even though they don't understand a word of what you say."

Na podstawie: www.openculture.com

- A. Chaplin went on tour of the USA at the same time.
- B. They also had lunch together, during which they talked a lot.
- C. Chaplin's reply to this was both intelligent and full of humour.
- D. While there, he asked a film director to arrange a meeting with Chaplin.
- E. He arrived in America in December 1930, and he visited New York first.
